Sports coaches apply their skills in a wider variety of contexts and with a more diverse range of athletes and participants than ever before. This book introduces the professional competencies and knowledge needed to build successful working relationships across the different communities and groups with which coaches operate. The book offers important insight for coaches who work with specific populations including different age groups, black Asian and minority ethnic bame people, those of different gender or sexual orientation, individuals with disabilities or illness, the socio economically disadvantaged and refugees. Drawing on real-world case studies such as coaching girls in combat sports and coaching cardiac rehab patients and adopting a critical approach to values, philosophy, and pedagogic process, this book argues that understanding the recipient of coaching and their particular needs is as important as content knowledge with contributions from leading coaching researchers and practitioners. This is important reading for developing coaches, students on sports courses, and other individuals involved in the sport pedagogy domain who seek to gain a better understanding of the demands of meeting the specific needs of people in the coaching process.

Mental discipline is a trainable trait coaches do not have to rely on players to either have mental discipline or not, but there is a mental discipline training process to follow to teach the players in this book how to train high school football players to be mentally disciplined. Coach Bill Renner describes the process of mental discipline training for high school football players. This process includes the procedures for on-the-field, off-the-field player conduct, and football program procedures. There are many areas a high school football coach must set a behavior expectation for the players: often those areas are overlooked, or the behavior expectation is not established prior to it being violated by the players. With 23 years of successful head high school football coaching experience at four high schools, Coach Renner has created a comprehensive list of the areas a head football coach must set behavior expectations for his players. A sampling of those include on-the-field situations such as stretching and agility, injury procedures, sideline conduct, practice attire, game attire, scoring a touchdown, practice accountability, and post-game player handshake line. Off-the-field areas include care of the locker room, care of their equipment, attendance at freshman or JV games, away game trips, classroom behavior, and academic checks. Player conduct areas include player's language, promptness, attitude, social media, in-season socializing, and homecoming week activities. Football program procedures include program traditions like touching a sign, national anthem conduct, victory song, pre-game meals, captain selection team picture, and banquet attire. Coach Renner gives you his team's expectations for each of these areas and more. He also details the mental discipline training he instituted. to correct inappropriate behavior for each area those discipline training reminders were different for in season off season or classroom school violations if you would like to develop a strong football culture you need to have behavior expectations for all the areas the players will be in this book will give you a comprehensive outline of how to accomplish creating a strong football culture by training high school football players to be mentally disciplined

This innovative introduction to the theory and practice of sports coaching emphasizes the social context of training developing and managing athletes. The book argues that although coaches commonly employ techniques such as feedback, reflection, and a variety in instructional models and learning styles, most do so implicitly and without fully understanding the complex interplay between coach, player, content, and social context. By defining learning as a social practice rather than a simple transmission of facts, the book aims to deepen the coach's understanding of the coaching process to help coaches systematically develop their programs and get the best out of their athletes.
